

WILDLIFE WEDNESDAYS WITH FOCRG

Blue Tit

One of the most recognisable of the UK's tits, in winter it can be seen joining forces with Great Tits and Coal Tits while searching for food, and can often be seen in these groups around the Rec.

This little bird is common in woodland, hedgerows, parks, and gardens. It loves eating insects - particularly caterpillars, seeds, and nuts.

Great Tit

Great Tits can be spotted in quite a few places around the Rec, often in the company of other smaller birds such as Blue Tits. It is the largest tit in the UK, and though originally a woodland bird munching on insects, seeds, and nuts, it is now a familiar sight in our gardens.

Long-Tailed Tit

Easily recognisable from its long tail and little puff body, you can often spot these charming little birds hopping around in an excitable small family flock in the woods between the top and bottom playing fields. They are mainly insect feeders, but will also feed on small seeds when they come across them.
